Shizenkan University

MBA Program

in Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation

2023 Academic Year

Mission Outline of the Shizenkan Graduate School

We present a unique leadership educational model. The Graduate School of Leadership and Innovation, Shizenkan University (henceforth “Shizenkan”) is dedicated to educating global management leaders, using a holistic and humanistic approach.

The school aspires to produce “whole-person” management leaders with the professional skills for driving innovation, reforming business and organizational transformation—who are at the same time humane and sensitive to social issues. We aim to educate the “whole-person”, to help them live harmoniously in the modern world. By developing such management leaders, we hope to contribute to building a peaceful society and to help mankind.

While capitalizing on the traditional approach of U.S. business school management programs, the school questions what is truly needed for successful management leadership education, by observing the ever-evolving social, business and economic environments and by anticipating the needs of the coming century. It offers students a new principle of management leadership education - originating from Japan and Asia.

Our Program

The Design & Leadership for Societal Innovation MBA Program (henceforth “the program”) design is based on the view that our socio-economic system is at the cusp of dramatic transformation – a turning point in history.

Traditional business schools embodied 20th century capitalism. They were founded on the assumption of continuous growth, of economies based on mass-production and mass-consumption, operated by hierarchical organizations. Business schools produced administrators who played key roles in running these organizations, in which employees had clearly-defined roles and were constrained by the essence of their work functions.

But the assumptions that underpinned these schools are being challenged. The ecological and economic sustainability of the world is now in question. Governments and corporations increasingly stress sustainable development goals. Consumer needs have diversified and the development of distributed production technologies such as cloud computing and 3D printers have delivered customized small-quantity production and consumption. The emergence of social networks, and the gig and sharing economy have triggered a shift away from traditional business management models. The hierarchical organization is being replaced by a flat, network-based model, which emphasizes communication and connection of individuals across divisions and organizational boundaries.

In this new business environment, what is needed for leadership is not management skills that depend on traditional incentives, nor on titles or positions. Rather, the new era demands leaders with strong interpersonal skills, able to earn the empathy and trust of people and enlist their support and collaboration.

Moreover, the development of artificial intelligence (AI), robotics, the Internet of Things (IoT), blockchain, cyber-currencies and other technological and scientific innovations are rapidly changing our lives. The nature of value creation is shifting away from monopolies of intelligence, resources and markets, seeking the expansion of economies of scale. Value now depends on creating new avenues of intelligence and entrepreneurship, challenging stakeholders to take risks and create a new reality. The ecosystem that supports startups exists not only in Silicon Valley but around the world. Entrepreneurs who challenge the old setup are now agents for value creation, replacing big corporations. In response, these big corporations are on the defensive, many have abandoned their traditional in-house approaches to innovation and shifted resources to open up innovation and collaborate with these external entrepreneurial initiatives.

Looking at the bigger picture, we see ourselves at a critical point in history. Modern western values underpin the triad of our socio-economic system i.e., the sovereign state, democracy and capitalism. Modern western values, which have been an engine for globalization and economic development (and growing economic disparities), have begun to crumble. At the same time, we observe the swing of the economic pendulum from the West to the East, especially to China and India, after being dormant for over 200 years of colonization and social turmoil. Furthermore, rapid advancement in science and technologies have brought us great benefits, and will continue to do so, but they will also disrupt our lives and how our societies are structured. In particular, the resulting systemization of our lives means we could end up being atomized and losing our sense of humanity.

At Shizenkan, we seek candidates who see and understand these great tides of history, who will challenge the future with their own willpower, and who want to improve their organizations and society. By offering what we call a “whole-person” program in management leadership training, in a competitive and invigorating environment, we will support next generation management leaders. These leaders will be equipped with management and business skills, as well as human and social skills that can help lead the age of transformation and creativity.

Our Philosophy

The program at Shizenkan is designed to develop a sensible approach to effective management leadership. It is based on our unique philosophy and approach:

1. We Create the Opportunity for Entrepreneurs and Young Managers to Develop Proficiency in Key Areas

We create an opportunity for entrepreneurs and young managers to develop three key critical skills. As the foundation of the program, we explore quantitative analysis, as well as logical and strategic thinking. These have long been on the core curriculum of traditional business schools, since they are an essential skill set for management professionals. Second, we look at design thinking; the observation of what the real world needs and potentially wants and the reflection on what business and society should be. Thirdly, we focus on thinking “out of the box”, which allows us to conceive a future scheme beyond the past or present and helps us deal with the exponential and disruptive innovations in science and technology facing us today. We aim to develop a new breed of management professional by merging traditional business school education with these new methods.

2. We Aim to Develop the Outlook and Perspective of the Manager and Entrepreneur

We aim to develop the perspective of the manager or entrepreneur. One problem faced by business schools is the compartmentalization of education. The essential factors in business management - accounting, finance, marketing and strategy - are segmented into small areas and frameworks. As a result, management tends to lose overall oversight. At Shizenkan, we constantly try to see the world through the eyes of a manager-entrepreneur. We place business policy at the very core of the program. Thus, unlike other educational institutions, our objective is not to produce experts in finance and accounting but well-rounded managers, entrepreneurs, and leaders.

3. We Ascribe to a Liberal Arts Education to Build Leaders Who Have a Clear Set of Values and Who Understand What Might Be Coming Next

We use liberal arts education in our own way to build leaders who have a clear set of values and philosophies and understand what is coming next. Specialized knowledge and skills are essential for the success of management and professionals. However, they are only the tools to help achieve goals, not the answer to fundamental questions such as “for whom”, “for what”, and “why”. We believe education systems that simply teach “how” are fundamentally flawed. Our curriculum includes history, religion, philosophy, sociology, science and art. We believe the liberal arts are necessary to help develop comprehensive thinking, understand the broad sweep of history and explore the essence of our human existence. This in turn helps leaders make decisions using their own set of values. Equally importantly, the liberal arts allow business professionals to understand the reality of our changing world, to have better insight into the driving factors of history, the divergence/convergence of the world, and thus make good observations of the future.

4. We Try to Cultivate Leadership by Facing Society and Others and Reflecting Upon Ourselves

We try to cultivate leadership by embracing social change: we think that the first and foremost important element of leadership is contemplation of the meaning and goal of life through self-reflection. This is normally defined as recognition of one’s inner voice and values. For management professionals, who often wield influence over society, self-reflection should also include examining our relationship with society and other people; to question the meaning of our lives and goals within the context of society.

5. We Want to Connect People and Institutions Who Share Similar Values

We want to connect people and institutions who share the same values. Shizenkan operates in partnership with the School of Inspired Leadership (SOIL) based in Delhi, India, the IESE Business School in Barcelona, Spain, and Fundação Getulio Vargas (FGV) in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. With these partners, our institution has a faculty exchange program to conduct joint workshops and research projects relating to global business management and the future of leadership education. Shizenkan also collaborates with the Chinese Chamber of Commerce in Japan and plans to create an interactive network with the Chinese business community in Asia. Academics and business leaders in South Korea, Singapore, Bangladesh, Belgium, Switzerland, Israel, the United States, Canada, Brazil, Uganda and Indonesia have joined our network and delivered lectures.

6. We Strive to Deliver a Cutting-edge Education in Leadership and Management, Grounded in Asian and Japanese Values

We strive to deliver a cutting-edge education in leadership and management, grounded in Asian and Japanese Values. Many business schools across Asia implicitly accept or adopt Anglo-American methods, the basis for all major business school education. Shizenkan is different. In Asia, the philosophies of living symbiotically with nature and rule of virtue are deeply rooted. At Shizenkan, we start with American business school education, which is based on western rationalism, yet we also incorporate Eastern philosophies—Zen and meditation are part of our curriculum. We seek to become a bridge between the East and West, and a model of management leadership that is best adapted for the future.

Matriculation:	August 20, 2023

Shizenkan is a bilingual graduate school with a campus located in central Tokyo, a 5-minute walk from the Yaesu Exit of Tokyo Station. The school is accredited by the Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology (MEXT) and offers a master's degree in business administration ("MBA in Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation"). Courses run continuously over two years (essentially 20 months, with summer and winter breaks). Classes are generally held twice a week, once on a weeknight and during the day on Saturday or Sunday.

Most courses are offered in both Japanese and English. Up to 80 students will be accepted per year from a pool of promising applicants worldwide. The cohort will be divided approximately in two, half taking classes in Japanese and the other in English, so admissions selection will be carried out based on the language the applicant chooses. It goes without saying that both cohorts accept Japanese and international students. After enrollment, in principle, students take a two-year program in the language of their choice. However, please note that some required courses will be conducted jointly in English with both the Japanese and English classes (these courses will be conducted in English, even for students who have enrolled in the Japanese program). These courses are designed to provide students with experiences that transcend language and culture based on the idea that English, the global standard language of business, is indispensable for future leaders.

We believe that the future of leadership education lies in learning beyond the boundaries of specific sectors. We are a graduate school of business administration, so we see many of our students coming from the business sector, perhaps intending to manage firms and projects or start a business in the future. At the same time, we will accept applicants from the public and civic sectors: international organizations and central/local governments as well as NGOs and NPOs and social enterprises. We do so because we believe that the leaders of the next generation must combine a sharp business sense with public-mindedness. As the concept of social enterprise becomes widespread, PPP (public-private partnership) becomes increasingly popular, and the boundary blurs between profit/nonprofit and public/private, Shizenkan offers an opportunity and a place for students to grow holistically, in an environment where people come from different sectors to learn together and inspire each other.

With this belief, all students take compulsory courses in the 1st year together and share many of the same courses in year two at Shizenkan. At the same time, we offer several electives in the 2nd year that cater to the particular needs of each sector in exercising leadership.

Different from conventional business schools who aim to provide basic knowledge to young people in their 20's, Shizenkan University's program is tailor-made for working professionals in their 30's with rich experience to nurture their growth as business leaders (entrepreneurs, policy makers, etc.). That is why Shizenkan University has designed a sophisticated and integrated curriculum to give a holistic and comprehensive view of business creation and management, and students learn basic business literacy and skills in accounting, marketing, and finance as well as more in-depth content. For those of you who do not have a lot of business knowledge, we would highly recommend supplementary study prior to starting the program. In particular, logical thinking/writing, understanding and interpretation of financial numbers (reading of financial statements, understanding the role of BS/PL/CF) are the most basic skills required.

At Shizenkan, we operate our classes based on the idea that the "learning space" is created by both faculty and students. Students are expected to be "active contributors of the learning space", who not only deepen their own learning but also contribute to the learning of the entire class by speaking up, asking questions, and engaging in dialogue, rather than being "passive consumers" of the class.

Our Objectives (Diploma Policy)

The goal of the program is to educate well-rounded management leaders with the self-awareness and responsibility to be business professionals as well as members of society.

Upon completion of our unique curriculum, students will receive a “Master of Business Administration in Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation,” a degree that recognizes the abilities required of the next generation of leaders: leading business innovation and organizational transformation, with an overall eye for overseeing a wide range of functional activities, people and organizations from the perspective of managers or entrepreneurs.

The following four competencies are a more concrete definition of the abilities and qualities required of the holistic management leaders that we define.

- Personal Will Power... The capacity to acquire a sense of mission, act with vision and at the same time continue to grow as a person through constant self-awareness and questioning
- Manager’s Ability to Conceptualize... The courage to ignore convention and the weight of the past and push ahead with long-term goals for business activities and management
- Leader’s Ability to Actualize... The ability to drive creation and innovation by leading the self (i.e., initiating action and setting an example for others), to deal sincerely with people, and to win their empathy and trust
- Core Holistic Competency... The caliber to make decisions and take resolute actions on the basis of firm beliefs and principles, supported by a sense of self-awareness and social responsibility

Qualities of a Whole-person Manager and Leader

More specifically, our definition of the whole person management leader includes the following 6 qualities:

1. Self-motivated

We will develop self-motivated people who take on innovation and creation, not armchair critics who talk about things in the third person; we believe that awareness comes only through practice.

2. Eye on the Big Picture

Shizenkan does not intend to nurture specialists by function. We will develop managers and entrepreneurs with a holistic, long-term view who can personally oversee a range of functional activities and organizational operations while being buffeted by environmental changes, tides of innovation and paradigm shifts.

3. Empathy

It is said that a third-rate leader wins people over with titles, and a second-rate leader wins people over with knowledge. A first-rate leader convinces with personality and character. Shizenkan will develop leaders who back up their ideas with logic, convey those ideas to people passionately, win their empathy and trust and cause a ripple effect throughout organization and society.

4. Socially Conscious

We will develop “whole-person” management leaders who do not change their stripes depending on the situation, who are business professionals as well as members of a community, and who take on responsibility for the future of the whole society.

5. Open to Diversity but with a Strong Sense of Identity and Self-esteem

In a globalized world, leaders must accept diversity, which we believe requires having a strong sense of personal identity. Our students will be sensitive to differences and not look at things in a nationalistic, narrow-minded parochial way.

6. Independent, Autonomous

Shizenkan will develop leaders who are not dependent on the validation of people around them or of the public, but who can judge and act based on their own values, principles and beliefs and who take responsibility for the consequences of their actions.

Degree Requirements and Award of Degree

To complete the program, students must be enrolled in the program for two years and earn the credits from the all compulsory courses (43 credits in total), plus at least 3 credits from elective courses, for a total of 46 credits or more. The degree of Master of Business Administration (MBA) in Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation will be awarded to those who have fulfilled the above requirements.

The MBA is a nod to the model of education that came to symbolize 20th century capitalism, but the full title (Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation) also shows our desire to innovate to respond to the challenges of this century and beyond.

Students who have failed to earn more than one quarter of their credits during their first-year courses (excluding optional courses) will be subject to expulsion. However, if the Faculty Committee determines that there is a sufficient reason, the student may be exempted from expulsion.

Network After Graduation

Graduates will join Shizenkan’s alumni network and be eligible to participate in various activities for the alumni.

We are a graduate school established in 2018 and our parent organization, the Institute for Strategic Leadership (ISL), is an educational institution that has been operating since 2001. ISL runs a non-degree management leader development program for people in their 40s that has turned out more than 1,600 business executives, including many who have gone on to manage major firms. ISL is also active in training and support of social entrepreneurs. In addition to their own network of classmates, Shizenkan graduates will therefore have access to the ISL alumni, bringing more opportunities for continued growth and networking across sectors and generations.

Admission Policy

In the selection process, an applicant's potential will be assessed using the following 3 elements.

1. A willingness to take the initiative and find your own path in life

Leadership entails taking the initiative and influencing other people to bring about change. Leaders must also have a strong self-perception, forged through life experiences. They must be curious, pursue continuous personal growth, and aspire to become better people. They must be willing to start or rejuvenate a business, and challenge the status quo of existing organizations, rather than becoming departmentalized specialists. Applicants from the public sector must be willing to take on policy making and operational tasks in their organizations.

2. The ability to absorb knowledge and think critically

Applicants should strive to understand the fundamental nature of things, as well as have the ability to think about complex structural phenomena, use logic to form their own hypotheses and engage in constructive discussion to verify these hypotheses.

3. A sense of social awareness and willingness to help your classmates

Applicants should be concerned about world affairs and our societies and their problems. They should also have their own ideas about the tasks and challenges of the organizations they run or work for. They should be able to face reality without succumbing to idealism and contemplate deeply rather than focus on the surface of things. Further, candidates should be prepared to actively contribute to the learning and growing experiences of others, and to be considerate of them in a spirit of friendly rivalry.
