in Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation

2024 Academic Year

Shizenkan University Aspiration

The Graduate School of Leadership and Innovation, Shizenkan University (henceforth “Shizenkan”) is a unique leadership education institution, unparalleled in the world. It provides a whole-person management leadership education, which aims to develop leaders with the professional managerial skills to lead change and innovation – and who are at the same time humane and sensitive to social issues. With the development of such whole-person management leaders, Shizenkan aspires to contribute to building a peaceful and prosperous human society.

Shizenkan aims to bring a paradigm shift in business leadership education. While capitalizing on the traditional approach of U.S. business school management programs, Shizenkan questions what is truly needed for successful leadership education, by observing the ever-evolving social, business, and economic environments and by anticipating the needs of the coming century. Shizenkan offers students a new principle of management leadership education – originating from Japan and Asia. Shizenkan’s philosophy is encompassed in our founding spirit, mission, and purpose.

Founding Spirit

At this critical juncture in the history of humanity, we strive to realize a peaceful and prosperous future with kindred spirits across the world by pioneering whole-person leadership education from Japan and Asia.

Mission

We shall generate innovation and wisdom through programs that encourage both a broad perspective and deep self-reflection, a space (“ba”) that enables mutual inspiration and learning, and an ecosystem that catalyzes collaboration and co-creation.

Purpose

We aim to contribute to the realization of a humane, equitable, inclusive, and sustainable society by nurturing whole-person leaders of vision, willpower, and integrity, who through professionalism and empathy inspire others to live a life of purpose and service.

Our Program

The Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation MBA Program (henceforth “the program”) design is based on the view that our socio-economic system is at the cusp of dramatic transformation – a turning point in history.

Traditional business schools embodied 20th century capitalism and were founded on the assumption of continuous growth, of economies based on mass-production and mass-consumption and operated by hierarchical organizations. Such business schools produced administrators who played key roles in running these organizations, in which employees had clearly defined roles and were constrained by the essence of their work functions.

However, the assumptions that underpinned these schools are being challenged. As represented by the concept of planetary boundaries, the UN SDGs, and impact investment, the ecological and economic sustainability of the world is now in question with governments and corporations increasingly stressing sustainable development goals. The diversification and individualization of consumer needs and wants that accompany the maturation of the economy and society, and the development of decentralized production technologies, have brought about the advent of the custom low-volume production and low-volume consumption model, symbolized by digital fabrication and the sharing economy, instead of the mass-production and mass-consumption model. In addition, the strong sense of crisis over global environmental issues such as climate change, biodiversity loss, and resource depletion are shifting the conventional centralized, urbanized society to a self-sustaining, decentralized society, where people can experience quality of life and wellbeing while connecting with people and living in harmony with nature in their local communities. In addition, the Covid-19 pandemic has been a major factor in this shift. Furthermore, with the spread of information technology (IT) tools such as online chat and video conferencing during the Covid-19 pandemic, the hierarchical organization is being replaced by a flat, network-based model, which emphasizes communication and connection of individuals across divisions and organizational boundaries.

In this new business environment, what is needed for leadership is not management skills that depend on traditional incentives, nor on titles or positions. Rather, the new era demands leaders with strong interpersonal skills, who are able to earn the empathy and trust of people and enlist their support and collaboration.

Moreover, the development of artificial intelligence (AI), robotics, the Internet of Things (IoT), block-chain cyber-currencies, renewable energy, nanotechnology, regenerative medicine, and other technological and scientific innovations are rapidly changing our lives. The nature of value creation is shifting away from monopolies of intelligence, resources, markets, and seeking the expansion of economies of scale. Value now depends on the creation of new avenues of intelligence and entrepreneurship, challenging stakeholders to take risks and create a new reality. The ecosystem that supports startups exists not only in Silicon Valley, but around the world. Entrepreneurs who challenge the old setup are now agents for value creation and replacing big corporations. In response, these big corporations are on the defensive, where many have abandoned their traditional in-house approaches to innovation and shifted resources to open up innovation and collaborate with these external entrepreneurial initiatives.

Looking at the bigger picture, we see ourselves at a critical point in history. Modern Western values underpin the triad of our socio-economic system i.e., the sovereign state, democracy, and capitalism. This triad, which has been an engine for globalization and economic development, has begun to crumble in the growing economic disparities and collapse of communities, as well as the rising international tensions and the heightened geopolitical risks. At the same time, after 200 years of Western dominance we observe the swing of the economic pendulum from the West to the East, especially to China and India. Furthermore, rapid advancement in science and technologies have brought us great benefits, and will continue to do so, but they will also disrupt our lives and how our societies are structured. In particular, the resulting systemization of our lives means we could end up being atomized and lose our sense of humanity, just as Charlie Chaplin warned in the movie, “Modern Times”.

Our Philosophy

The program at Shizenkan is designed to develop a sensible approach to effective management leadership and is based on our unique philosophy and approach.

1. Developing three essential skills as management professionals.

The program is designed with the aim of developing three critical thinking skills that will be required of all managers going forward. First and foremost is the indispensable skill necessary for analyzing complex situations and contexts, enabled by a rigid quantitative analytical behavior built on sound logic and strategic thinking. The second is the ability to envision new forms of businesses and local communities, which are derived from the actual needs of people and society. The third is the capacity to think in a non-linear manner, which enables managers to cope with exponential and sometimes destructive scientific and technological innovation.

2. Developing unique perspectives as business leaders and entrepreneurs.

The program is a comprehensive program aimed at nurturing managers and entrepreneurs, much different from other MBA programs that often specialize in developing specialists in particular functional areas. Classes that focus on specific corporate activities such as accounting, finance, marketing and strategy, are also conducted in a manner that emphasizes the perspective of managers and entrepreneurs. Furthermore, a core part of our curriculum, which directly develops the skills and perspectives necessary for managers, are the “Business Policy” course which provides a bird’s-eye-view of management, and the “Entrepreneurship” course which integrates various aspects of business in the startup context.

3. Liberal arts education to gain leadership principles and insights into the future.

Business knowledge and skills often focus on the "how", which are often just the means for accomplishing an objective. However, leaders are increasingly required to answer the question of “why” and the purpose of business undertakings. To cultivate this sense of purpose, we incorporate different liberal arts curriculum such as history, religion, philosophy, sociology, science, and art. By doing so, we re-examine our views on history, the world, our existence, our society, and help establish the values that are the basis of judgments, actions, and choices required of leaders. At the same time, in today's world, where society and the economy are undergoing major changes, we will understand the trends of the times from the past to the present and the future, and the transformation of the world, society, and human existence in globalization and innovation.

4. Fostering whole-person leadership through self-reflection and facing society and others.

The starting point of leadership education is to unpack the purpose and significance of one's life aspirations through introspection. Shizenkan's whole-person leadership education helps identify one's value compass and inner value system through coaching, assessments, psychology-based workshops, and experiential learning.

5. Practicing global education in collaboration with educational institutions and leaders around the world.

Shizenkan has established a core partnership with SOIL (School of Inspired Leadership) based in India, Delhi, and the IESE Business School in Barcelona, Spain, as well as the world's 7th largest think tank FGV based in Sao Paulo, Brazil. With our partners we collaborate in areas such as joint research projects in management, sustainability innovation, and leadership education. In addition, Shizenkan collaborates with the Chinese diaspora network that extends across Asia, including the Japan China Soshokai. Similar partnerships have been struck with intellectuals and leaders from countries such as South Korea, Singapore, Bangladesh, Belgium, Switzerland, Israel, the United States, Canada, and Brazil, who support the educational philosophy of the Shizenkan. These partnerships provide an opportunity to delve into and discuss the challenges of global management and leadership.

6. Pursuit of management and leadership studies based on the spiritual soil of Japan and Asia.

Asia has its own culture and spiritual soil, such as the monistic view of non-separation of the subject (self) and object (other), the principle of the virtuous government, and the view of symbiosis with nature. Shizenkan's program is based on the rational and logical approach that Western MBA education offers, but also incorporates Eastern thought and Zen meditation into the curriculum. As these bridge the ways of thinking between the West and Asia we believe that there will be a higher demand from society for these kinds of leaders in the future.

Major:	Major in Leadership and Innovation
Degree:	Master of Business Administration in Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation
Annual Admittance:	80 students
Class Schedule:	In principle, twice a week, once on a weeknight and during the day on Saturday or Sunday. *Some courses may occur on national holidays
Duration:	Two years (part-time)
Matriculation:	August 20, 2024

Shizenkan is a bilingual graduate school with a campus located in central Tokyo, a 5-minute walk from the Yaesu Exit of Tokyo Station. The school is accredited by the Ministry of Education, Culture, Sports, Science and Technology (MEXT) and offers a master's degree in business administration ("MBA in Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation"). Courses run continuously over two years (essentially 20 months, with summer and winter breaks). Classes are generally held twice a week, once on a weeknight and during the day on Saturday or Sunday.

Most courses are offered in both Japanese and English. Up to 80 students will be accepted per year from a pool of promising applicants worldwide. The cohort will be divided approximately in two, half taking classes in Japanese and the other in English, so admissions selection will be carried out based on the language the applicant chooses and both cohorts accept Japanese and international students. After enrollment, in principle, students take the two-year program in the language of their choice. However, please note that some required courses will be jointly conducted in English with both the Japanese and English classes (these courses will be conducted in English, even for students who have enrolled in the Japanese program). These courses are designed to provide students with experiences that transcend language and culture based on the idea that English, the global standard language of business, is indispensable for future leaders.

We believe that the future of leadership education lies in learning beyond the boundaries of specific sectors. As a graduate school of business administration, we see many of our students coming from the business sector with possible intentions to manage firms and projects or start a business in the future. At the same time, we will accept applicants from the public and civic sectors such as from international organizations, central/local governments as well as NGOs, NPOs, and social enterprises. Shizenkan does so because we believe that the leaders of the next generation must combine a sharp business sense with public mindedness. As the concept of social enterprise becomes widespread, PPP (public-private partnership) becomes increasingly popular, and the boundary blurs between profit/nonprofit and public/private, Shizenkan offers an opportunity and a place for students to grow holistically, in an environment where people from different sectors come to learn together and inspire each other.

With this belief, all students take compulsory courses in the 1st year together and share many of the same courses in the 2nd year at Shizenkan. At the same time, we offer several electives in the 2nd year that cater to the particular needs of each sector in exercising leadership.

Different from conventional business schools who aim to provide basic knowledge to young people in their 20's, Shizenkan University's program is tailor-made for working professionals in their 30's with rich experience to nurture their growth as business leaders (such as entrepreneurs and policy makers). That is why Shizenkan has designed a sophisticated and integrated curriculum to give a holistic and comprehensive view of business creation and management where students learn basic business literacy and skills in accounting, marketing, and finance as well as more in-depth content. For students who do not have a lot of business knowledge, we would highly recommend supplementary study prior to starting the program. In particular, logical thinking/writing and understanding and interpretation of financial numbers (reading of financial statements, understanding the role of BS/PL/CF), which are the most basic skills required.

At Shizenkan, we operate our classes based on the idea that the "learning space" is created by both faculty and students. Students are expected to be "active contributors of the learning space", who not only deepen their own learning but also contribute to the learning of the entire class by speaking up, asking questions, and engaging in dialogue, rather than being "passive consumers" of the class.

Our Objectives (Diploma Policy)

The purpose of this program is to produce whole-person management leaders who balance management expertise with a sense of responsibility and awareness of being members of society. Our unique curriculum brings together a comprehensive view of business activities, organizations, and management together with the entrepreneurial spirit and the flexibility to generate new ideas to create and transform businesses, which are the abilities necessary for next-generation leaders. Upon successful completion, a "Master of Business Administration in Design and Leadership in Societal Innovation" degree will be granted.

The following four competencies highlight specific definitions of the abilities and qualities required of a whole-person management leader that Shizenkan aims to develop.

- Will power as an individual - The ability to acquire a sense of mission, act with a clear vision, and simultaneously grow as an individual by constantly self-questioning one's mission in life.
- Ability to envision - The ability to envision new businesses, organizations, and new management styles based on high moral standards and a long-term perspective, anticipating future changes, and not bound by history or customs.
- Ability to realize - The ability to drive creativity and change by gaining empathy and the trust of people, creating positive ripple effects in organizations and society, and actualizing a concept.
- Ability to be grounded - The ability to hold a firm belief and philosophy backed by a view of history, the world, and of humanity, with a sense of responsibility as a member of society, and the ability to make decisions and act with a grounded value system.

Curriculum Policy

1. Through liberal arts education, students cultivate a world view, a historical view, and a societal view, that will help shape their individual beliefs, ideas, and philosophies, allowing them to deeply understand past trends and current issues, and at the same time, develop insights into the changes coming in the future.
2. In order to cultivate an overall bird's-eye view and a comprehensive perspective as management leaders, we break away from the educational paradigm of manager development by incorporating the essence of design schools and innovation schools. Through acquiring flexible thinking and sensitivity, students learn how to envision new business models that will be required in the future and bring about innovation.
3. The purpose of Shizenkan's educational paradigm is to utilize the skills and knowledge acquired by students in practice. There, the "ability to realize oneself as a leader" is required above all. In order to realize this concept, it is necessary to gain the empathy and trust of the people around us and let it spread like ripples to other people and organizations. In order to cultivate empathy, students must face themselves by collaborating with others and assess their own behavioral characteristics in moving people, and their strengths and weaknesses as leaders. Receiving feedback and cooperation from classmates is actively incorporated into the program through self-reflection.
4. Leadership cannot be fully demonstrated without aspiration and passion. It is not possible to confront uncertainty and risk, and sometimes endure adversity and continue to take on challenges, simply by giving orders to others. Unfortunately, the intrinsic driver of aspiration and passion is not something that can be acquired just through knowledge. "Who am I? What am I living for?" By repeatedly asking oneself these questions, one is freed from the restrictions of affiliation and title. Based on this recognition, the Shizenkan program actively adopts psychology and coaching techniques, and repeatedly holds workshops to encourage introspection and dialogue with oneself.

Degree Requirements and Award of Degree

To successfully complete the program, students must be enrolled in the program for two (2) years and earn the credits from all compulsory courses (43 credits in total), plus at least three (3) credits from elective courses, for a total of 46 credits or more. The degree of Master of Business Administration (MBA) in Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation will be awarded to those who have fulfilled the above requirements.

The MBA is an acknowledgment to the model of education that came to symbolize 20th century capitalism, but the full title, “Design and Leadership for Societal Innovation” also shows our desire to innovate in response to the challenges of this century and beyond.

Students who have failed to earn more than one quarter of their credits during their first-year courses (excluding optional courses) will be subject to expulsion. However, if the Faculty Committee determines that there is a sufficient reason, the student may be exempted from expulsion.

Network After Graduation

Graduates will join Shizenkan’s alumni network and are eligible to participate in various alumni activities.

Shizenkan is a graduate school established in 2018 and our parent organization, the Institute for Strategic Leadership (ISL), is an educational institution that has been operating since 2001. ISL runs a non-degree management leader development program for people in their 40s that has turned out more than 2,000 business executives, including many who have gone on to manage major firms. ISL is also active in training and support of social entrepreneurs. In addition to their own network of classmates, Shizenkan graduates will therefore have access to the ISL alumni, bringing more opportunities for continued growth and networking across sectors and generations.
